ISDH, IU partner on COVID-19 study

At least 20,000
Hoosiers will be tested

By ROB BURGESS
Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

During a televised press conference Thursday, Dr. Kristina Box, state health commissioner, announced the Indiana State Department of Health (ISDH) is collaborating with the Indiana University Richard M. Fairbanks School of Public Health at IUPUI to conduct a scientific study to measure the spread of COVID-19 throughout the state.

The closely monitored study will include random sample testing for SARS-CoV-2 viral infections and antibodies in Hoosiers.

In response to a Plain Dealer question, Box said they were in the planning stages of rolling out wider testing to those who proactively suspect they may have had the virus earlier in the year, but were never tested.

“We are working right now to figure out how we’re going to make sure that type of testing is available easily all over the state,” she said.

ISDH and IU will perform a scientifically valid random sampling of Hoosiers in tests conducted in four phases during the next year, beginning Saturday. In total, at least 20,000 Hoosiers will be tested for the study. Select members of the public are being asked to participate by invitation only to ensure that the sampling is representative of the population.

The scientific study will enable the state to take a

Campus pantry serves 20 to 25 students a week

By ANNE GREGORY

Although the North Manchester campus is quiet these days, Manchester University students continue to take classes. Most do so from home, but some were compelled by circumstances to live on campus or in neighborhoods nearby.

“COVID-19 sent a lot of students home, but it left others here in town with little to do but study. Some have limited access to food,” said Ali Goetcheus, director of civic engagement and the Acorns service office.

With the Indiana governor’s Stay At Home order in place, even students living nearby could not get to the Acorns Campus Pantry inside the Augustus and Lockie Chinworth Center, and few have easy access to transportation for shopping. Challenging circumstances led to a delivery service.

“Our students can ‘shop’ through a menu of items that we have available in the pantry. On Thursdays, we can fill a student’s request and it drops off where they live,” Goetcheus said. “At this time, we are supporting both students on campus and those in the backyard community.”

The pantry serves 20 to 25 students a week.

Most of those served have access to a dorm-size refrigerator and microwave, so the pantry concentrates on supplying items that make sense: Half a gallon of milk that fits in a small fridge; one-person servings; and dried goods. Ramen noodles, peanut butter, jelly, bread, milk and snack items are among foods available.

Most students who live on campus are on the meal plan, so for them, the pantry is supplying “gap food,” Goetcheus said. Those who live in the University apartments and neighborhoods around campus rely on the pantry to help out with meals.

The food pantry is made possible through MU’s partnership with Second Harvest Food Bank of East Central Indiana, Manchester Fellowship of Churches Food Pantry, Sodexo Food Service, MU vending contractors and donations from the public.

Parkview’s nearly 900 health care providers across northeast Indiana and northwest Ohio will also remain in-network with Cigna.

“For decades, Parkview and Cigna have demonstrated a record of improving community health, affordability and patient experience. Earlier this year, the two began collaborating on an agreement that would allow for common goals and increased data transparency to ultimately benefit employers and customers,” stated the release.

In addition to ensuring in-network access to providers, the contract renewal “includes reduced costs for Cigna customers” at the following Parkview Health facilities:

- Parkview Regional Medical Center

ISDH adds two Wabash County positive cases

There are now
12 local confirmed
COVID-19 cases, one death and 122 tests

By ROB BURGESS
Wabash Plain Dealer Editor

On Thursday, the Indiana State Department of Health added two more positive cases to Wabash County’s count of confirmed COVID-19 patients, making the local total 12.

On Tuesday morning, Keith A. Walters, Wabash County Emergency Management Agency director, stated that the Wabash County Health Department was reporting the county’s first fatality from the novel virus.

As of Thursday, the ISDH still only reported one local death and 122 tests.

Presumptive positive deaths being added

In a televised press conference Monday, Dr. Kristina Box, state health commissioner, said changes were coming to the death totals later in the week because they were including presumptive positive cases. She said this meant if a physician named COVID-19 as the underlying cause of the death of a patient, but there was no test for them, it would now be counted. She said this would push the numbers higher than previously seen.

“We rely very heavily on the diagnoses that are put on a death certificate, especially when someone dies obviously in a hospital or in a long-term care facility

Asthma action plan crucial for those with the disease

DEAR DOCTOR: Our 8-year-old grandson is coming from Atlanta to spend the summer with us in Idaho. He has asthma, and our daughter has mentioned that my husband and I have to become familiar with his "asthma action plan." What is that? How should we prepare?

Elizabeth Ko & Eve Glazier
Ask the Doctors

DEAR READER: An asthma action plan is a detailed roadmap for how to manage the disease, including medications and methods for preventing and controlling asthma attacks. It's necessary because asthma, which is a chronic respiratory disease, is both complex and serious. It can cause symptoms that change not only from day to day but from minute to minute.

For most of us, the act of breathing is effortless. But people living with asthma can never take their next easy breath for granted. The airways of someone who has asthma can suddenly become inflamed and swollen, which makes it difficult to inhale and exhale. This type of chronic inflammation puts their airways on perpetual high alert and makes the tissues liable to overreact to a range of stimuli. These are known as triggers and include dust, pollution, mold, perfumes, smoke, pet dander and other allergens, as well as exertion and even certain weather conditions. Any of these triggers can cause asthma symptoms, which include a wheezing sound when someone breathes, shallow and rapid breathing, sustained coughing fits, labored breathing and weakness or exhaustion.

During an asthma attack, or flare-up, the airways become swollen enough that it becomes very difficult, or even impossible, to breathe. In addition, the groups of muscles that usually help with breathing will tighten up, making getting enough air even more challenging.

The disease is managed with two types of medications – controllers and relievers. Controllers are typically corticosteroids delivered via an aerosol, which is inhaled. They are used in the day-to-day management of asthma to reduce chronic inflammation, decrease mucus production and relax the bands of muscles around the airways.

People with mild asthma may find that this treatment is sufficient to keep the disease under control. Relievers are medications to be used when an asthma attack occurs. They work by swiftly opening up the airways and relaxing the muscles, which either stops the attack or reduces its severity.

Because asthma is both unpredictable and potentially dangerous, it's important to plan ahead for all eventualities. That's where the asthma action plan comes into play. It's a written set of instructions that detail every aspect of an individual's asthma treatment. This includes potential triggers for an asthma attack, which medications to take, their dosages, their timing and what to do in an emergency. In addition to being familiar with this plan, be sure your local pharmacy has your grandson's asthma prescriptions on file, and that they include enough refills to last his entire visit. It's also wise to line up local medical help, in case it is needed.

Ask your daughter to send you a copy of your grandson's action plan before he arrives. This will allow you to familiarize yourself with the specifics, and ask any questions you may have well in advance. Or you can find a variety of printable or electronic forms at cdc.gov/asthma/actionplan.html.

‘Fear Not Tomorrow’

By DAVE SNOWDON

A few years ago while on vacation in Brown County, my wife and I saw a decorative sign in a craft store that said, “Fear Not Tomorrow, God Is Already There.” The words seemed so encouraging that I purchased the sign to hang in my office. Later, I searched for the origin of the phrase and discovered that the words are from a song written by Carolyn Adkins in the late 1960s.

Carolyn tells the story of a time when she was home very sick with the flu. She turned on a Christian radio station and George Beverly Shea, the soloist with Billy Graham, was being interviewed. He ended his interview with the words, “Fear not tomorrow, God is already there.” Carolyn said that the words gave her the hope she needed. She said, “God is not boxed in by time as we are ... He was already in those tomorrows that I was concerned about. My anxiety was replaced by God’s Sweet Peace.” Later, when she was better, she sat at the piano and wrote the song, “Fear Not Tomorrow.”

She was encouraged to record her song, which eventually became a popular CD. In 2009, Ruth Graham wrote a devotional book entitled, “Fear Not Tomorrow.”

The coronavirus has brought worry and concern to all of us and has painted our country’s future with uncertainty. It is in times like these that cause us to turn to God for the Hope that only He can give. Below are the words to Carolyn’s song, “Fear Not Tomorrow,” may they encourage you with the promise that God has all our tomorrows. Trust Him.

“Fear Not Tomorrow” by Carolyn Adkins
In this age of uncertainty, questions come to my mind;

What is waiting ahead for me and the rest of mankind?

Fear not tomorrow, God is already there.

He’s charting the course you’ll take;

He sees each hidden snare.

He’s waiting to guide you through each burden and care.

Fear not tomorrow, God is already there.

Are you troubled over things to come? Is your future unsure?

Are you dreading the coming dawn, the long day to endure?

Many things about tomorrow I don’t seem to understand.

Oh, but I know who holds tomorrow and I know,

Yes, I know who holds my hand.

Fear not tomorrow, God is already there.

by the provider. So by the physician or the advanced practice nurse that’s putting down the cause of death on there,” said Box, during another televised press conference Wednesday, in response to a Plain Dealer question. “The COVID-19 has a very classic look on a CT scan of the chest, on a chest X-ray and that clinical picture. We would look at whether the individual physician or practitioner said that that was the cause of death and that’s why we’re pulling that.”

Box said she would have more information on these fatalities on Friday.

“There’s not hundreds of these deaths. I don’t want you to think that there’s a very large number here. But I just want to prepare you that we will see an increase, and it will not be even a hundred, although any deaths are a tremendous number,” she said.

Statewide totals

On Thursday, the ISDH announced that 612 additional Hoosiers have been diagnosed with COVID-19 through testing at ISDH, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and private laboratories. That brings to 13,039 the total number of Indiana residents known to have the novel coronavirus following corrections to the previous day’s total.

A total of 706 Hoosiers have died to date. Deaths are reported based on when data are received by ISDH and occurred over multiple days.

To date, 72,040 tests have been reported to ISDH, up from 69,470 on Wednesday.

Marion County had the most new cases, at 160. Other counties with more than 10 new cases were Allen (44), Bartholomew (17), Cass (61), Elkhart (11), Hamilton (23), Hendricks (34), Johnson (22), Lake (55), Shelby (20) and St. Joseph (22).

The Lake County totals include results from East Chicago and Gary, which have their own health departments.

The complete list of counties with cases is included in the ISDH COVID-19 dashboard at coronavirus.in.gov. Cases are listed by county of residence. Private lab reporting may be delayed and will be reflected in the map and count when results are received at ISDH. The dashboard will be updated at noon each day. The dashboard also has been updated to make corrections based on updated information provided to ISDH.

A different kind of Holy Week

My office is just a few blocks from St. Patrick’s Cathedral in Manhattan. So, on a good day, I get to church when it opens at 6:30, attend the 7 a.m. Mass, maybe go to confession if it’s time, pray my morning prayers and give Jesus a little time to say whatever He has in mind for me for the day. Because there is a Mass every half-hour through 8, I sometimes happen to be present for three Masses.

But this Holy Week, with public Masses unavailable, that three-Mass record is history. On the other hand, I get notifications now on my phone and laptop for livestream Masses. Around when the coronavirus quarantine got serious, I would find myself not going to sleep until Pope Francis’ Mass at Santa Marta in the Vatican.

It drives me a little crazy when we say Masses are canceled. Priests are still celebrating Masses. And this spiritual communion business is real.

On Palm Sunday, I

Kathryn Lopez

happened to pray the Mass in Rome, on Fifth Avenue, a few blocks from the White House and in Phoenix You can go to some websites with some incredible lists – pray the Mass in Knock, Ireland, if you choose.

Praying remotely is one thing. But it’s impossible to digitally receive the act of communion. But from day one of this inability to receive the Eucharist, I’ve become more and more keenly aware of my own unworthiness. Think about it: The creator of the world sends His only son to die for me so that I might have eternal life. It’s absurd that I could ever deserve such a thing. I’m a weak human being, with all kind of flaws. But that’s the magnificence of Holy Week and Easter, and way beyond. We have been made by Love, chosen to be gifted a faith that transcends whatever is going on in the world – this gives meaning to all the suffering, this raises us up to greatness, because our lives do not depend on us overcoming every human flaw, but trusting in a creator who does the most amazing things for us in this valley of tears.

Now, I recognize that this isn’t what everyone believes. But, gosh, when you have someone who truly believes this as a friend or neighbor, that’s not a bad deal. When we truly believe, we can be good friends and neighbors. We could even amaze you with our love.

Don’t we see it now, during this anxious time? A UPS driver delivered to me a package the other day. He seemed to want to smile, with the brightest of smiles. He seemed to want to show, simply by saying “Good morning,” that there is hope – he has hope – that we need to be careful, but we also need to live and love one another.

Like many of us, I know people who have died, who have lost someone, who have fought and recovered from COVID-19. My life is made possible by people who haven’t ceased putting themselves in harm’s way. If there is only one thing that we learn from this quarantine time, may it be that everything good is a gift, and we are so much closer to one another and to the creator of us all than we realize when we are sucked up in the busyness of everyday life. If we are to learn anything from this fraught time, it must be a conscious decision, a choice. And it’s a choice between the soul’s life and death.

We know what we want, don’t we?

critical step forward in understanding how COVID-19 is affecting Hoosiers.

The first round of testing will begin this weekend with a pool of at least 5,000 Hoosiers randomly selected from across Indiana’s 10 emergency preparedness districts. The study will include conducting both nasopharyngeal swabs and blood draws. Nasopharyngeal swabs will be tested for COVID-19 within 72 to 96 hours, while the blood samples will be tested at a later date for antibodies to determine if an individual has had COVID-19 in the past.

Indiana University Health and Eli Lilly and Co. will process nasal samples and report them back to ISDH. Participants can choose the method by which they receive their results when they register. Registration and delivery of results will be managed by Indianapolis-based Zotec Partners.

Additional phases of testing will take place in late May 2020, October 2020 and April 2021.

Led by the Fairbanks

School of Public Health, an interdisciplinary team of IU scientists, physicians and epidemiologists has designed the study and developed the scientific plan for execution by state agencies. The IU team will also analyze the study results and provide scientific interpretations of the data to the state.

Participants will be notified of their eligibility for the study by mail, text message, email or phone and will be directed to the testing site closest to their residence. Registrants will receive a unique code that they will show at the testing site as proof of participation.

Testing for the study will be conducted at eight fixed and 10 mobile sites around the state from Saturday through Wednesday. Additional sampling may be added later depending on initial participation levels.

Support for the testing operation is being provided by the Indiana National Guard, Indiana Department of Transportation, state Emergency Medical Services personnel and other state and private partners.

DAILY SCRIPTURE

"A gentle answer turns away wrath, but a harsh word stirs up anger."

Proverbs 15:1

Congress should get back to work

Instead of President Trump adjourning Congress so he can make "recess appointments" to executive agencies and judges, Congress should reconvene to do the people's business.

We have argued before in favor of allowing remote voting temporarily. This is something now under consideration. But if Congress cannot figure out a plan to do so without fear of legal challenges, they have to figure out an alternative way to reopen safely.

To allow members of Congress from the West Coast to return to Washington, D.C., by car, if necessary, the date of reconvening could be pushed back. But reconvene they must. Especially in a time of crisis, Congress should be ready to legislate and provide oversight of other branches. Most importantly, Congress should not let executive and judicial positions go unfilled. This crisis requires all hands on deck.

This isn't to say all 10,000 or so congressional staffers should be populating the U.S. Capitol complex, nor that senators and representatives should mingle at close quarters. Most staff should work remotely, and members should keep mostly to sanitized offices, with temperature checks at least twice daily. The legislative floor of both branches should observe strict rules limiting in-person seating or standing only to a small number at a time, a version of distancing rules at most big-box stores that remain open across the country if deemed "essential businesses."

Voting periods should be extended – in the House, substantially – to allow these rules to operate smoothly. If the voting time were extended for hours, no more than a few representatives would need to be in the chamber at the same time.

One way or another, though, whether by remote or a modified in-person system, Congress should be in session. At last count, the Senate had not acted on 82 executive branch nominations, with another 15 in the pipeline. Trump hasn't made his selection for another 150 vacant posts, but until the other 97 are confirmed, he has little incentive to do so.

With the federal government trying to handle so many added responsibilities and new programs amid the pandemic, it is unconscionable to leave executive agencies short-handed. Bottlenecks in aid or supply delivery could cost people their livelihoods, their health, or even their jobs.

Likewise, there are now 82 federal judicial vacancies, with Trump having chosen nominees for 43 of them. The Senate should do its work and confirm any and all who are qualified for their posts.

Finally, there is more legislating to be done. This being a crisis, some of it may require unusual dispatch. If members of Congress are present in the Capitol complex and able, in a pinch, to talk to each other in person, it will be far easier for them to act with due speed and consideration.

If the public is trying to get back to work, Congress should be working to make it happen.

Enough of COVID-19 inanity

As a journalist, I appreciate the job our TV news folks are doing to keep us informed during these trying times. But, honestly, they're starting to wear me out.

It apparently hasn't occurred to them that, with only one story to report, they're bound to repeat themselves. So, at the risk of being the only nasty guest at the happy party, allow me to list the things I'm really tired of hearing.

Please stop telling me to "hunker down" and "shelter in place" and practice "social distancing." Covid-19 is a highly contagious virus. I understand that – I'm not an unruly second-grader needing constant admonitions from an exasperated teacher.

Quit reminding me that if we "trust the process" we can "flatten the curve" and "reopen the economy." I don't even know what the process is, and since we've been inexcusably negligent on testing, I don't believe we can even find the curve, let alone figure out how to flatten it.

Don't keep calling it a "milestone" when a new high is reached for number of people tested, number of people who've contracted the virus and, especially, number of people who have died. It's just ghoulish, OK?

And start denying airtime to empty jibber-jabber purporting to predict the future. Gov. Eric Holcomb recently tried out, "We're still in the woods, but we can see the clearing ahead." That's lame, but not as bad as "light at the end of the tunnel," which I actually heard twice on the same day. It got old during the Vietnam War and has not improved.

I would especially like to ban two phrases that have really overstayed their welcome:

The new normal. When people say this, they sometimes mean "things are different from what we're used to," and sometimes they mean that "even after this mess is over, things are never going to be the way they used to be."

Either way, it's a stupid thing to say. "Normal," like "average," is a moving target.

Every time you add something new to the mix, you change the average. Say you're computing the average height of 10 people, and it comes out to 5 foot 7; you add or subtract a person, and the average changes to 5 foot 6.9 or 5 foot 7.1. Would you go on and on about the "new average"? No, because it means absolutely nothing in the real world.

Neither does "new normal." My normal on one day is not the same as my normal on another day because I don't do the same things every day. And your normal is not the same as mine or anybody else's.

But people keep saying it, and it's shorthand for what they really want to say, which is, "Life is really awful right now, and nobody knows how to make it better, which means life is going to stay awful, so deal with it."

It is a depressing, defeatist attitude, and I want nothing to do with it. Reject the new normal.

And, finally, the worst of the worst: We're all in this together. Well, we are and we aren't.

It's true that we're all afflicted with the same fear, but we're each facing it alone, hunkered down and sheltered in place while we practice social distancing. This banal expression of solidarity, after the first few dozen times, sounds suspiciously like "misery loves company," especially when uttered by evening news anchors who are sitting 10 feet apart. The next time I hear it, I swear I'm going to call one of them up and say, "In it together? Fine, come on over. We'll share a six-pack, then I'll take a little nap while you clean my house."

Hearing the phrase now makes me feel like I'm at a funeral.

As a shallow youth, I hated funerals because they seemed like a cynical enterprise to suck money out of the grief-stricken. But as I got older, I began to see their useful purpose.

When a loved one dies, even if it was totally expected and we thought we were ready for it, there is a sudden hole in our lives that leaves us numb and reeling. The ritual of the funeral – friends and relatives mouthing inane but comforting sentiments like "So sorry for your loss" and "I promise it will get better" – helps us cope with that initial, paralyzing heartbreak.

"We're all in this together" is that kind of inane but comforting sentiment. And that was fine to get us all over the immediate agony of loss. But now it's as if the funeral is just going on and on. Funerals are supposed to be brief and cathartic, not endless and excruciating.

The old normal is dead. Got it. Let's bury that sucker and move on. The world still turns, and time doesn't hunker down for anybody.

How not to hold an election during a pandemic

When Thomas Edison was asked about conducting thousands of experiments without results, he responded that he always got results: He knew "several thousand things that won't work."

George Will

America's states are, Louis Brandeis said, laboratories of democracy, and recently Wisconsin successfully demonstrated what does not work when holding elections during a pandemic.

After insisting for weeks that the statutory election schedule should be kept, Democratic Gov. Tony Evers tardily awoke to the problem of voting amid social distancing. Four days before the scheduled April 7 vote, he called the legislature into special session to pick a later date. The next day, the Republicans who control both houses swiftly adjourned the session, thereby conserving – they are conservatives – the status quo at a slight, they hope, cost in lives. (Voters and polling-place workers are disproportionately elderly.) Wisconsin Republicans, who know their candidates, clearly think they fare better when fewer people vote.

Wisconsin was an early incubator of progressivism, and Evers acted on the progressive assumption that executive power should be as large as any progressive executive thinks it should be, as long as the executive is progressive: He tried to rewrite Wisconsin's election laws by fiat, but was rebuked by courts. This bad behavior on both sides was related to a bad idea: judicial elections. Composition of Wisconsin's Supreme Court was at stake. On Election Day, in Milwaukee (population, 592,000), five of 180 planned polling places were open.

Long before COVID-19,

every two years Americans in various states have endured hours-long waits in blocks-long lines at polling places. The possibility that COVID-19 will still require some social distancing in November has focused attention on voting by mail (VBM).

Responding to Democrats' efforts to give states federal subsidies for mail voting, House Minority Leader Kevin McCarthy of California sternly says they should "stop worrying about politics." Perhaps – let's be fanciful – his reprimand was also intended for Donald Trump, who says he opposes VBM because, in addition to worries about fraud, it "doesn't work out well for Republicans."

Republicans have been more diligent in warning about substantial election fraud than they have been successful in documenting it. Other than that ascribed to an indicted North Carolina Republican operative, which caused a congressional election to be re-run. And other than Trump's revelation that in 2016 he lost New Hampshire because a slew of buses – surely conspicuous; evidently unnoticed – brought in "thousands and thousands" of illegal voters "coming in from locations unknown." ("But I knew where their location was.")

In a 1996 special election, Ron Wyden, D-Ore., became the first U.S. senator elected in an all-mail vote. In a referendum two years later, 69 percent of Oregonians endorsed VBM for all elections. The second Oregon senator elected by VBM was Republican Gordon Smith. Social science provides little evidence of any substantial partisan advantage from VBM, which voters (although African Americans understandably like visiting polling places) favor for its convenience. Wyden and Sen. Amy Klobuchar, D-Minn., propose legislation to mandate and subsidize state measures to facilitate VBM. Although subsidies in today's emergency might be defensible, mandates unwisely – and unnecessarily – meddle with the laboratories.

New Hampshire's Republican Gov. Chris Sununu has endorsed VBM. Elections in Oregon, Washington, Hawaii, Colorado and Utah are essentially entirely VBM, with ballots mailed to eligible voters. Twenty-eight other states, including California, Florida and Arizona, plus the District of Columbia, allow absentee voting without providing a reason. So, a majority of Americans have VBM, absent the convenience of automatically receiving ballots – although some states' voters can put themselves on a list to receive ballots. This alarms those who fear the sort of substantial fraud that has not been verified after hundreds of millions of votes cast by mail.

Time was, Election Day provided a communitarian moment, with almost all voters visiting polling places. In 2016 however, 41.3 percent of votes were cast early or absentee; in 2018, 43.1 percent; in 2020, perhaps a majority. This year early voting will begin at least as early (because of COVID-19, states' rules are in flux) as Sept. 18 in Minnesota. Scores of millions of votes might be cast before the presidential debates are over. However, given the usual caliber of such debates, this will not appreciably deprive early voters of pertinent information.

When Trump says VBM would mean "you'd never have a Republican elected in this country again," he concedes that VBM increases turnout and that Wisconsin Republicans are right about the party's appeal: The larger the turnout, the less likely a Republican majority.

Woman questions why man won't pull trigger on divorce

DEAR ABBY: I am a 39-year-old woman, recently separated. I have been seeing a 45-year-old man who is also separated, but not divorced from his wife. We have been a couple for about a year. I don't understand why he doesn't get a divorce.

Dear Abby

When his wife (who has also been seeing someone for more than a year) found out we were seeing each other, it got ugly. She came to our place of employment (her ex and I work in the same place, different departments) and tried to get me fired. Fortunately, she was unsuccessful, and she tried to get physical. She told me she is his wife – she told him as well – and said she tells him what to do, and she “owns him.” At that point I had to stop seeing him.

After a month apart, I became really depressed, and we hooked back up. We go out and enjoy each other's company, and the sex is AMAZING. He told me he has never felt like this with any other woman nor has he ever introduced anyone to his daughter (who loves me dearly). We are taking things slower and more carefully, but I am falling in love.

He tells me he misses me when we are intimate and how grateful he is for me, but it isn't enough. I want more, but I don't want to scare him away. Is this a dead end? Should I be patient, or should I just walk away? – It's Complicated In The East

DEAR COMPLICATED: I have to wonder why, after a year, you are not in the process of being divorced. You also need some straight answers about what keeps this man under his wife's thumb. The woman appears to have serious mental issues. Is the reason financial? Emotional? Once you know, you will have a better idea of what to do.

I am troubled by the fact that your boyfriend's wife is so volatile. As it stands, that woman is controlling not only him but also you, and that's not healthy.

DEAR ABBY: I was raised in a very strict household. At 19, I left home and never looked back. Today, I am 54, divorced and own my own home.

My mother passed away, and my father moved in with me a few months ago because he didn't like living alone. I have had to make several adjustments to accommodate him.

The problem is, he's extremely traditional and refuses to change his way of thinking where I am concerned. In his eyes, I am still his child, and I should respect and abide by his rules.

I have a boyfriend who lives several miles away. When he visits, I would like him to spend the night with me in my room. My dad insists (demands) that my boyfriend sleep on the couch or in the guest bedroom. He has informed me that it is my choice, but if I don't abide by his wishes (demands), he will refuse to talk with my boyfriend, which undoubtedly will cause stress in my relationship.

I have told my father that I am a grown woman and that I refuse to give up my freedom to accommodate him in this area. After all, this is my home. How should I handle this? – All Grown Up In Arkansas

DEAR ALL GROWN: If you knuckle under to Dear Old Dad's demands, you are making a big mistake. Sit him down, “remind” him that you are no longer a little girl and if he cannot accept that you are an adult with needs of your own and be respectful to your boyfriend, he will no longer be welcome to live under your roof. Do not try to placate him or you will be living the rest of your father's life in a second childhood, and it won't be a happy one.

Believers in Christ are to be light to unbelievers

From the writings of the Rev. Billy Graham

Q: My parents have grounded me because I hang out with guys who don't go to church. How can I be a witness to them if I never have contact with them? If I withdraw from them, they will think I'm judging them. Doesn't the Bible say that Jesus spent lots of time with sinners? – W.C.

Billy Graham
My Answer

A: Jesus interacted with sinners, because all are sinners, but He did not allow the social group to conform Him to its ways. He seized every opportunity to present spiritual truth and lead souls from death to life. Our social contacts should be opportunities to share our faith with those who do not yet know Christ.

The architect of popular culture is none other than Satan. He is the chief designer and chief marketer, and he has been branding worldliness since the beginning of time. His methods are shifty and constantly in motion, changing fads and trends to keep the world running in circles, trying to keep up with the latest and greatest. This is a deadly path.

Believers in Christ are to be light to unbelievers, but they must also distance themselves from worldly living. Some will think it is “peculiar,” just as many others will secretly admire those who stand strong. Some friends will drift away, feeling uncomfortable because Christians are not comfortable with ungodly behavior. This may lead to forms of persecution and rejection, but Christians will accept this with patience and in the spirit of love, because this is how to be conformed to the image of Christ.

God uses this testimony to draw people to His saving message. Therefore, flee the influence of worldly friends and conform in loving obedience to Christ who has called us to live according to His holy standards. Accept rejection if its purpose is to ultimately glorify God.

AT THE DOOR

In some homes, it is a tradition to leave your shoes at the door so the traces of the outdoors don't get tracked throughout the house. Floors stay cleaner as slipped or bare feet tread silently about. This week as you approach your house of worship, prepare your mind for a peaceful and positive experience. Enter God's House with happiness, don't bring the outside in. Leave your cares behind...deposit them at the door.
